The whole neighborhood was quickly aroused and inned out in search of the fieude. In the mean time the half murdered woman was conveved heave and physicians citied to her assistance, who report her in a critical condition.

Diligent search was made for the perpetrators of the herrid crime, and a young nearon named Joe. Gins was errested by offices Jewett and Long, brought to town, and lodged in jail, but it was not then known that he was a participater in the crime. Late to the aftergrow the other brute was pointed out to Joe. Weeboro and his brother, by a negro boy, and was by then arrested and brought to town and lodged in jail. We were unable to learn his name. He lived near Wesboro's, heyond Pigeon creek, near the railroad.

We are informed that he made a confession of the diabolical crime, implicating the boy Joe. Upon searching him the kulfe was found, bloody, and his clothes were bloody, though he had made an effort to wash the blood from his shirt. There were also found on his person a resor, the earrings of their victim, which had been literally torn from her ears, and over $7 in money. The buy Joe, we understand, auknowledged getting $1 from the other negro. The money taken from the woman was ubout $15.

The remarkably original discovery has sen made by certain wise-acres that the Conional Amendment, having been rejected by ne Legislature of Kentucky, cannot be adopted The last Legislature must have en an omnipotent body, truly, to bind through all time and all eternity not only all succeeding gislatures, but the people also, the masters of ill legislatures and all legislation.

These new lights must have been studying Filmer and the High Tory Party of England, that have been contending for just this doctrine for the last two hundred years or more. It is, perefore, we presume, excellent democratic The king takes an oath not the continent was an event not distant. Untopermit certain things and to do certain other hings, no matter what. He is bound by virtue of his regal office to preserve the statu quo during his reign. Though all the world may be moving around England, the fast-anchored isle and its serene sovereign can't budge an form for circulation in Kentucky. It was cirinch, or permit anybody else to budge an inch. enlated extensively at the time. We have room mty is tied up by the actions of his fi- for the following extract this morning, from rious predecessor. Well, in process of time, which the reader will perceive that the author, Like other mortals, he takes up his line of march at one period of his life at least, was deeply in to the undiscovered country, and a new scion of of legitimacy has to take the same old oath that the other did, and not a step forward can be taken during his reign, and so on to the latest posterity! You see, therefore, how everything has been fixed, immovable as the everlasting hills through all time. The ante-spirants of the fourteenth or fifteenth or any other century kindly relieved their posterity from the burdencome business of governing themselves, put an effectual damper upon all mischievous innovators that might counce after them, and who might and actionally take it into their capsus to question the infallibility of the said ante-spirants. And our antiamendment champions of Kentucky have made the profound discovery that this alightly antiquated doctrine of once fixed, clessow fixed, is the very essence of unmitigated, double-distilled Democracy, and the genius of the Constitution. The party of so much enlightened progress is certainly destined to make a note in the world. Its advocates have vindicated their claims to magnificent modals of—sheep skin. Now, without laring claim to any original discoveries in this rather curious philosophy, the position, if we metake not, has been, for some years past, that if a measure is defeated in the Legislature of one of our American States to-day it may be reintroduced to-morrow or the next day or the introduced to-morr oyalty puts on the divine robes; but that son of legitimacy has to take the same old oath that introduced to-morrow or the next day or the ought up when a rew Legislature has been elected. It has not been the practice for the er of unfixing for the next generation. That defunct friends the High Tories of the fifteenth century. How delighted they would have been If they could have foreseen that their pet dogme of once fixed, always fixed, would one day be adopted by certain wise men of Kentucky two or three hundred years afterwards. Ye gods and little fishes, what political luminaries ceives the canction of the executive it is a law until repealed by the same Joody or is set aside by a competent judicial tribunal. If another bill is defected it can be brought up again and again. If a measure receives its quietus in one Lecislature another may take it up and indorse it. These principles would seem to be almost too well known to require comment, but we Cerolinianiem is redirirus Hence we are bound to notice political hair-splittings and party met-We don't know that the example of our fore-athers will have much weight with our new lights in reference to this matter; but it and Rhode Island both rejected the Constitution presented to them for ratification by the Convention of 1787—the present Constitution of the United States without its amendments but subsequently reconsidered the matter and adopted it. The patriots of those days were not, evidently, the disciples of the old High Tory Party of Great Britain; that glory was reserved for the original discoverers in political science tossy that we have sympathized only with eur who figure as the opponents of the Constitumal Amendment in Kentucky in the year of grace 1865.

We desire that there may be no unkind eling between Col. Marc Mundy and our-lves. We have received many courtesies at his hands, and tried to reciprocate them. But we see no reason why he has assailed the course of the Journal and other newspapers of the district soward him. We have not said a word stay a week at a place; when they get sick or against him, or at least we did not until yesterday, after his public onslaught upon the district back, and, with the greatest insolence of word wepapers. Possibly we may have said that and manner, force themselves upon me, but he could not be elected, but we must do his good sense and intelligence the justice to suppose that he has all along understood that fact as well as we have. If he wishes to be a mere | choose, whether I wish to or not; all the no bob to Bob Mallory's kite, may his sail through the air be a pleasant one, and may he inhabit one of the castles he has builded there.

Col. Mundy should know that a newspaper, whilst entertaining all proper respect for him, has a right to select its own candidate for Congress. If we have not alluded to him, it was simply because we thought there was no reason why we should. No candidate has ground son why we should. No candidate has ground

The Richmond Whig of Saturday, according to the telegraph, contains orders from the military authorisies prohibiting the newly elected municipal council of that city from organizing, and declaring the election null and void. We call attention to this circumstance. It is suggestive, and those concerned may, if they ose, heed it. See what is gained by attempt ing to revive the slavery agitation and elevating men to office upon that issue. If electors are not satisfied that the nigger is abolished letthem go ahead and agitate him afresh, and they will get full esticiaction in 1868—and afterwards! We warn them of what they are incurring now as we warned the disunionists in 1860. The smallness of some men is almost past belief. Secondon dies hard, but it must die. The great ability of Breckinridge rendered him a formidable enemy of the Union, and his influence in the Senate, where he always commauded respect, was feared by all lovers of the Union. It was better, therefore for Kentucky and for the commo country, that his seat should be vacant than that he should continue to hold it in the mids of our civil war. And, for all practical purposes, it has been vacant ever since he resigned it to go into the rebellion. Mr. Davis, as his successor, has been of no earthly advantage grees, will have a free constitution, and will ratify the Constitutional Amendment before the meeting of the National Legislature. Georgie will make the twenty-seventh State adopting the amendment, provided Kentucky shall not have the proud honor, and provided, also, that South Carolina or some other Southern State shall no get ahead of her in the work. There will be a race between the Southern States now to see which State shall adopt the Constitutional Amendment first! Look on this picture and then on the victure of 1861. What a contrast! How signally every prediction of the Union men of the South has been fulfilled, and more What effective abolitionists the secessionist have proved themselves! How feeble do Garrison, Phillips, Cheever, & Co. appear in com parisor! The secessionists have accomplis in four years what would have taken their ailies in the North, without them, a whole century to effect. They were the blind, mad agents it overthrowing what they wished and expected to make perpetual. But had not history taught that same lesson a hundred times before? Yet the disunionists couldn't read history and could learn nothing from it. Their eyes and ear were hermetically closed against its teachings. We heard one of their most eloquent champi-one declare in a public address that nothing ould be learned from history as to the struggle about to begin, because there never had been such a struggle. "The books of history are sealed volumes to us." he exclaimed: and truis they were sealed. They have been opened since, however, and even secessionists of the patent stamp-always excepting the opponent of the Constitutional Amendment in Kentucky may now read and understand them, if the

These opponents are as blind as our r nowned disunion champion was in 1861. To them the volumes of history are closed. Upon them the teachings of history and of experience are alike lost. But the day is not far distant when even their eyes will be opened. And afterwards it will never be impossible to make the blind see. That point will have been defnitely settled for the special benefit of science and posterity.

Ex-Governor Brown, of Georgia, in his address to the people of that State, on retring from the governorship, speaks of what he saw and heard during his late visit to the North

I beg to assure you that there is no divisio f cylinion myon the subject of immediate abo-tion. It is decreed allke by the people and the overnment. They have the power and they be determined to exercise it, and to overcome are determined to exercise it, and to over all obstacles which we may attempt to thro he way. When slavery has been abolished, I believe the present Chief Magistrate of the United States, who, having sprung from the mass of the people, and by his industry, energy, and ability having passed through almost every grade of office from the lowest to the highest, may juely be styled a representative man, will cast his immense power and influence into the scale of equal rights and popular government, and will-leave the States, when reorganized, in the undisturbed management of their own internal affairs, including the question of suffrage, police, the regulation of labor, etc., etc., I therefore recommend the people of Georgia to give his administration a hearty support.

We said weeks arow we had no doubt Govern-In another portion of the same speech Mr Davis indulged in a most brilliant enlogy upon see labor in contrast with slave labor, and deicted the wealth and progress of the free States glowing terms, pointing to Massachnsetts as e model State of the Union. If, instead of he noisy harangues which Mr. Davis is now livering in the central portion of the State against the pending amendment, he would reodnce that speech of 1846, he might some what compensate the loyal men of Kentucky

The great arger lies in his inability to carry his humans and enlightened policy into effect in conse uence of the power which demagogues and saffected persons in Kentucky and other States are giving to extreme men in the North c opposition to the President's measures and operal views.

This is the great mischief which the oppo ents of the Constitutional Amendment lu this State are producing, to the serious detriment of the Southern people. Let every friend of the South in Kentneky pouder well the above words of Governor Brown.

The plain truth of the matter is, that there is no preside danger of Kentucky resisting the Constitutional Amendment, if it is once fairly and legally adopted.—Pemocrat.

Yes, but, when the amendment is adopted b three-fourths of the States, you and the rest of the quasi-rebels will swear that the adoption i not fair and legal. You are preparing for that oeltion already. You tell the public that it is ery easy to get up any number of organizaous and call them States, and thus secure just as many votes for the amendment as are wanted. So, upon the adoption of the ameudment by the requisite three-fourths, you and your rother quasis will protest that some of the roting States are not States, and that the amendment is not adopted at all. We know you. And this doesn't imply that we know

When a majority of the Northern States fuse to permit negro suffrage, is it not the ery cooleet sort of thing on the part of thos ates to endeavor to force it on the South? Shame has evidently lost her "blush," and may never find it again.

Mrs. Benj. Starkweather, aged forty-six years, and her daughter Elia, tourteen years old, were chopped to death in bed with an axe. The blows severed the skull every time. The bodies presented a horrid sight They were also stabbed in many places with a butcher-knife, which, with the axe, has been found. The son of Mrs. Starkweather, named Albert, twenty-four years of age, is being examined to-day, and it locks as though he committed the deel for a sum less than $100 lu money, which was found on his person, with the knife. Their beds were found on fire. When found, the daughter still breathed, but died in ten minutes.

THE FISHING BANKS. HOW THE NEW YORKERS GO OUT OF TOWN OUT OF TOWN.

There are a great many ways to go out of town, and one of the easiest is to go to the Fishing Banks. Being easy the New York Herald says it is popular. While whole circles of men and women are wondering, like Othello, where they can go, counting the expense up this river and down that railroad, and canvasaling the price of board at all the half fashionable watering places, the large and sensible public, that never had a thought of Saratoga, puts a little luncheon in one pocket and a dellar in the other, house up the Fishing Banks' boat, and, presso is out of town.

Down ou the banks the public gets a sea breeze better than there is at Newport at a great deal less than half price. It gets a change of scene not less marked or pleasant than the tourlast gets in the White Mountains, and an "alterative" quite as efficient as eighteem barrels of Congrees water. It have life aside for a day as fully as if it were on its way to Europe, and at night it is home to supper and sleepe in its wan bed again, with that pleasant weariness that follows a troile in the open sir—not that one can ramble a great deal on the "banks," they heing under water—merely the shoal places off the Jerney shore, where the blacklish and porgies hold their cancusses and conventions. But, shough it would be wet rambling, one can neverthelese have a pleasant time there and also get nicely weary.

GOOD ORDER.

Once upon a time this trip to the Fishing Banks was the chosen one of the rougher elements of city life, and every trip was marked by the ordinary outrages of rowdysam. But this is not the case now, whatever may have induced the change, and the trip is decidedly one that the moet respectable person can make. Rather more than a hundred went dawn yesterday on the little Massasoit, and in all there was not one person on the boat disorderly, and no circumstance occured in the whole trip that would offend even the nicest sense of propriety. The way in which it is done is simple.

Father, mother, two or three of the children, and the little baskets of sand wiches and pickles are gathered tocather on some one of the long docks that run out into the East river, or into the North river, by seven or eight A. M., and there they wait in groups till the boat comes, which it does when it has called at its half dozen other picace. Up she steams, a next little craft. other liaces. Up she steams, a neat little craft with the mer v passengers langhing every where, colors flying, belle ringings, and the livel

There are fifty or sixty stout young fellow is board who go to fish. Some of them, by heir bronzed faces, have been coldiers, all tremen probaty, and most are mechanics, taking a holiday to enjoy life. None of them are row-less all are sober, in good hum or and inclined to have a good time in a gyndal way, and every one carries his own bait and tackle. There are cllows, with good-sized basket wo or three old efelows, with good-sized baskets, awing faith in what they are to do. There are wenty or thirty ladies, mostly young, and everal fellows who come as attendants on these. There are half a dozen families complete—father, mother, and all the children. There are intumerable backets of provender. There is the mergetel lavaelite, with the harp, which by times is totse and plays, and the learned German who knows the fiddle. DOWN THE BAY-ON WITH THE DANCE.

DOWN THE BAY—ON WITH THE DANCE.
Under the bluest sky, with the calmost sea beneath, and the most deliciously fresh breoze just stirring the ladies' curls and veils and manifiles, the boat steams away. Then as she passes down the bay, there is a dance. The energetic Israelite, with his harp of David and his infimate knowledge of the figures, sits by the learned German, who keeps his features unmoved by the exhibitation of his own fiddle, that makes every one else, even the happer, enthusiastic. The aged gentleman with a gray beard and bine slippers leads up the serious young lady intent upon her 'steps," and they go through it bravely, and the aged gentleman "don't care how much jig there is in it." Bravely also does the matron at the othersile, and the young man in the liven coat by her sides so does the young lady with early, so does every one, and the dame is the first success. Meantime on the lower deek people are picking out. ary drink or getting the lunch "out of the CASES OF EMERGENCY.

The little boat rolls like a cradle and pitches like a patent rocking horse, and here and there one begins to be conscious of a stomach Then the said one feels "uneasy sensations." lecomes indifferent to the landscape, to the blue sky, to pleasure, to fish, to like, and all the time the harp of David to me away moder the energetic fingers of the Israelite and the violin ecreams frantically, tormented by the learned German, and the aged gentleman with a gray beard and blue silppers, and the energous young lady and the one with ourls, and the young man with a linen cost, and the matron, all dance, dance, and weave themselves in and ont. like a puzzle, and the dick man mentioned tries to turn his stomach inside out as if it were a boy's pocket with a stolen cent in it.

GETTING BETTER.

with a stolen cent in it.

GETTING BETTER.

But all that is soon over, and the sick feel lumensely better for having been sick, and are as hungry as wolves. There is a grand rush on the lunch basket. There is a man cutting up a beashel of potatoes, and a bashel of onions and chunks of fat pork that look like chunks of lard, and hundreds of hard claud—meaning chowder. His labor is contemplated by the company with pleasant sensations, and a very a tive business goes on in blackberry pie and cups of coffee.

WE ARRIVE. WE ARRIVE.

At eleven A. M. we are on the banks. "This is the place," says the captain; "d'we see that white spot on the! Highlands, and then the light-housee? that's just the range, the shellowest part of the banks; then off here on the other shore, jist in range of that little house and the motch way up in the farthest woods. Just where them ranges meet, sir, that's the spot, and if there ain't no fish here there ain't none nowhere. This is jist the spot where the old Garrick lay, and hove overboard a load of tin." Erichenly there is some association between fish and tin—that metal has its attraction for the fluny tribes just as it has for more mortals, perhaps—but what the exact association is we cannot say. Wishing to retain the respect of this ancient mariner, we didn't show our ignorance by asking stopid questions. ing stupid questions.

But just on the spot where "the old Garrick" hove over a load of tin we hove to and in a minute a hundred lines were in the water, and in a few minutes more a hundred porgies were flavping on the deck, and in baskets and bucksts. The happy excursion-late suddenly became the keenest sportsmen, and sil are at it with the highest give and the deepest interest.

and ell are at it with the highest glee and the deepest interest.

'Now, if they lie still right here," eavs the Captain, "and be contented, they'll eatch a nice to of fish; but if they don't they won't. There's a fellow he's got a bite. How he pulls. He must have a whale; and it's ouly allittle porgy. There's a fellow got two. Oh. they'll catch 'em lively here; but you'll hear 'em in a minute. Move the boat, move the boat. About one o'clock they'll catch 'em awful if they stay right here."

Meantime the fisherman kept at li closely; the old fellows quie'ly putting down and pulling up, the girls ecreaming with delight over every success, and here and there an unlucky fellow who has lost five or six batts, grumbling his indisposition to "ett there and feed fish all day."

Perhaps the most exciting part of the whole forme, so far as aport gree, is contributed by the fish hawks. Those fellows go to Fishing Banks, too, and behave themselves when there quite as galiantly as ever did hawk in the olden times for the entertainment of the former lords and ladies. Now they sail in the sir half a dozen at once, and one gets a listle lower and enddenly rushes pitch down like a diver. Away he goesplash! in the water apparently under timbors the white dash that dies up as he strikes. But he reappears in an instant, striking the sir with great rapidity to get up again—there is a fish in his claws, and away he sails for home; or perhaps the fish is too much for him—he struggies near the surface, making a brave battle—loses the fish at last, sails up and soars around only to try it again. HAWKING.

At half-past twelve every backet is half full of porgies, and the porgy becomes monotonous, so there is a cry to move the boat on the part of a diseastisfied fisherman; but it is too feeble to move the robust mariner, and the boat stands still. Then the dissatisfied fisherman becomes disensted, and inquires "who wants to hire this line?" and gives other indications of his private opinion that it is waste of time to fish in such a place. But the public gives its decision against the fisherman by holding its tongue and not joining in his solitary cry, and the boat stands still.

By and by where cry, and the boat stands

By and by when every one has accumulated his little store of little fish, there is a loss of interest—it is dull. Men and women lay aside their lines and pay their respects to that remain of luncheon. Tables were spread everywhere, plethoric baskets discorge, comfortable black buttles show themselves, cold meat is quoted high, boiled eggs do, pound mke, fair to middling, and breadstuffs in demand.

quoted high, boiled eggs do, pound whe, fair to middling, and breadstuffs in demand.

A CHANGE OF UASE.

Meantime the fishing capitain circulates among the fishes—a broad and sound old mariner, with rods of adipose tissue at the base of his neck that make him look round-shouldered. He is feeling the public jud-e, and in consequence the order is given to move the boat. Away she goes again, a mile further straight out to sea, and once more the lines are over. There are a few minutes of idleness—no bites at all. Then there is a general disgust and a vocilerous demand to "move the boat." It is discovered all at once that every one was satisfied with the other place. "Wait a minute," soys the capitain. "Wait a minute," soys the capitain. "Wait a minute, and one man in that time catches a poigy "as big as a shad." In a few minutes some one else catches one "as big as a shark," and so it goes. Within five minutes everybody in the boat is catching big fish as fast as he of the minute with the product of the boat. Fat men, who of course are always imperturbable, sit on the edge and pull up their fish with serene comfort. The more eager thin mon keep on their feet and lean far over the rail, as if to meet the fish half way. Boys hand in and throw out with boylah impatience; girls tangle their lunes with characteristic excitement, and annonnee with triumphant little screams that they have got another, and here a and there a woman fishes as coolly as if she only came for a woman fishes as coolly as if she only came for a mess, and better than all takes the fish off the book herself without the least nonsense. A eingular eight. HOME AGAIN. HOME AGAIN.

It seems that every one is just in the midst of it. So rapidly does time pass that it might be only ten minutes, and yet we have been on the banks three hours and a half, and so comes the luckorable order to take in the anchor. There are loud appeals for half an hour more: but it is no use, and up the anchor comes and away we go once more over the densiy bine so homeward. Falsermen fall to counting their spolls, to taking a drink, to eating a lituch, to singing some; girls to fixing their hair and boasting how many they have caught: the energetic Israelite to his harp, the learned Gorman to his fiddle, and every one that lan't at anything clee to dancing.
